Story: Shlichus from Shamayim

Chapter 2:

His questions answered, he turned to see who had brought him the letter. A man stood behind his chair, watching him silently. Rav Aharon looked at him and recognized him. He suddenly felt as if he was about to faint, for the man standing behind him, the bearer of the brilliant letter, was none other than the shtetl's Baal

Agala – the towns wagon driver. R' Aharon stared at the wagon driver disbelievingly for another moment, and then his heart began pounding even faster.

Didn't the Baal Agala pass away 5 years ago?

Rav Aharon Hagadol was a tremendously elevated person, and he suddenly understood that a Neshamah had come down to him while he was awake. He began to tremble. Standing to face the dead wagon driver, he asked quietly, "What brought you to come and bring you this letter?"

"I don't know who gave me this letter," the Baal Agala continued simply. "I was given the Shlichus to bring this letter to you from Shamayim." When R' Aharon pressed him further, he continued, "Rebbe, I'll be honest with you. I didn't have many zechuyos, and therefore I'm alone. I have a room in Gan Eden where I sit alone. Whenever there is something that needs to be revealed to a Tzaddik in a tangible way, I am given the job. I am dressed in a body, and I come down to deliver the message." "What have you done that you were Zocheh to this Shlichus?" Rav Aharon asked curiously. The wagon driver hesitated. "I'm unable to reveal everything that goes on in Shamayim," he said slowly, "but I'll tell you a bit."

Accelerating the cooking process (part 2 of 3)

Reducing the amount of food (or drink) in the pot

2. Reducing the contents of a pot may cause the contents more quickly. Therefore, if food is in a pot and it is not completely cooked, it is forbidden to remove a portion of the contents. On the same token, one may not remove water from the urn on Friday night if the water is not fully hot.
